Public Comment: I just wanted to say that my daughter was so excited about this school! However, since it seems like everyone has done nothing but criticize and put up barriers to keep the school from developing, it is truly heart breaking. I don't feel you really care about all the students, and this is directed at the everyone involved in trying to shut this school down. I know the school should have had much more planning completed but when you keep trying to tear things down, nothing can be built up. Your actions have made the overall moral of the staff a new level of low. No one wants to be insecure with their jobs or with the fact they don't know if their students will need to go to another school. It is extremely unnerving. You really need to think whether you are being fair to ALL the students, I do not believe you are. You are treating them with no respect as individuals who are here to learn. I understand that there have been many issues with behavior but not all the students are involved with that and you are punishing the ones who are innocent. Instead of trying to close the school, why don't you send some help? This is a successful model, but you need to give it a chance. Oh and it didn't help that every step of the way the Board of Education took their sweet time setting things up, which leads me to believe (my opinion) that they were trying to let them fail, or make them fail. I wonder if any of the people making these decisions even have a child in this school, I am guessing they don't

Public Comment: Hello,

I'd like to say I am very pleased with the school thus far. I am all for the Learning model they are trying to implement. My son strives in an environment where he is allowed to think outside the box. What they are trying to do with the students is very smart. I believe if they had a more selective application process they would be able to weed out the problematic students that are causing the problems and not allowing for an environment conducive to learning. Partly because the parents do not care. If they were given more funding they would be able to implement all the required necessities to bring the teaching model up to par with the states requirements.

Public Comment: The DE Met school is a wonderful program for students who do not fit the traditional educational mold. While it is having struggles, the premise is sound. rather than close the school, appropriate resources should be utilized so that it can reach its full potential and serve the students who are willing and able to thrive there.
